Dear Bob,

I have just completed my five month internship at Dale Carnegie Western Connecticut and it was a truly enlightening experience. At the beginning of my time there, I was very anxious to apply all of the theoretical knowledge I had gained from my Masters program and I was able to do that at this franchise right away. Everyone who worked there welcomed questions and ideas with every consulting project. They always took the time to explain the full context of the situation so I could be a part in creating solutions for companies. Apart from learning about external consulting I also learned a lot about running a business and sales. Although those topics may not be of particular interest for my career they are areas I need to understand no matter what I do. They are essential to surviving in corporate business.

I also had the opportunity to take the 12 week Dale Carnegie Course in Effective Communications and Human Relations and the High Impact Presentation course. These classes made a lasting impression on me and I gained skills that I will have for the rest of my life. The Dale Carnegie Human Relations course is comprised of principles that help you manage human relations in a way that guarantees a successful relationship outcome and also methods of handling stress and worry. It also forced me to step out of my comfort zone and increase my public speaking skills. I never thought I could be that enthusiastic while in front of a room! My presentations for work and school are much more exciting as a result of that course, which is a skill that is invaluable in the Training and Development field.

This internship has been an extremely rewarding experience and I know that all the skills and abilities I developed here will be with me for the rest of my career.

Thank you for letting me be a part of your company,

Eileen Tabler
